Subject nib foundation announces over $500,000 in community funding nib foundation has donated more than half a million dollars to community groups from across the Hunter and beyond as part of its inaugural Community Grants program.

Announced during a function held at nib's national headquarters in Newcastle today, the nine chosen organisations will collectively receive $574,480 in grants that will contribute to community-based programs aimed at improving the health and wellbeing of people in NSW, Queensland and Victoria.

The beneficiaries of nib foundation's Community Grants program are:

- Beresfield & District Community Care Inc: Cooking for You and Me Project (Hunter, NSW)
- Epilepsy Action Australia: Epilepsy Service Program (Hunter, NSW)
- Cystic Fibrosis Queensland: Cystic Fibrosis Community-Based Treatment Program (QLD, NSW & NT)
- Catholic Health Care Limited: Living Conditions Program (Hunter, NSW)
- Dystrophic Epidermolysis Bullosa Research Association (DebRA): National EB Nurse (National)
- The Nicholas Butters Trust: Paediatric Palliative Care (Northern NSW)
- Deaf Children Australia: Deaf Girls Circle (VIC Metro)
- Hunter Region SLSA Helicopter Rescue Service: Satellite Tracking System (Northern NSW)
- Whitelion Incorporated: Young Women's Hepatitis C Awareness Program (VIC Metro)

Launched earlier this year, the response to the funding application round was overwhelming according to nib foundation Chairman, Mr Terry Lawler.

"We received 240 applications from a diverse range of community organisations from around Australia, which highlighted the growing demand for community services funding and the overall impact the global financial crisis is having on this sector," Mr Lawler explained.

"With so many wonderful organisations and important programs seeking funding, the task of selecting the recipients was not easy. However, the fundamental principle that guided our decision-making was to select those programs that make the greatest impact on as many lives as possible."

The program funding for the nine recipients ranged from $5,000 to $100,000.

While the successful recipients offer a diverse range of program services, each fall within nib foundation's community grant focal areas of support including wellbeing, equity and access, as well as education and training.

Mr Lawler said the foundation was also impressed with the creativity and unique approach that many of the programs were taking to deliver important outcomes for community groups.

"For instance, Beresfield & District Community Care's Cooking for You and Me Project, provides aged and disabled people with skills and information to prepare healthy and nutritious meals for themselves. It is such a simple concept but it addresses very real health and welfare issues in our society."

Speaking at the announcement, Director of Social Enterprise at the Centre for Social Impact and former federal parliamentarian, Cheryl Kernot, reinforced the importance of corporate philanthropy to the social sector and highlighted the opportunities available for organisations such as nib foundation to make a significant contribution to Australia's social landscape.

"Corporate foundations have a very important role to play as social investors, helping to create not only financial, but also social value in our community," said Ms Kernot.

"We are witnessing a time of profound change in the social landscape with the emergence of social businesses. There are many new opportunities for Foundations and socially responsible businesses to make longer term embedded investments through collaborations and positive procurement policies to make a lasting social impact in the local communities they serve."

Since its establishment in October 2008, nib foundation has now allocated $1.8 million in funding of health and wellbeing initiatives – more than three-quarters of which has been for Hunter-based programs.

nib foundation's National Grants program is currently open to invited applicants and will provide funding of up to $500,000 per year for a maximum of 3 years for programs that address significant health issues facing Carers and Young People. Expressions of Interests can be submitted before 25 November with the successful recipients to be announced in the first half of 2010.
